

Mallory Sepler-King is a Staff Attorney in the Civil Rights Litigation Program at the Disability Rights Legal Center. Ms. Sepler-King's case work focuses on class action and impact litigation centered on physical and programmatic access for individuals with disabilities, including access to special education. Prior to joining the DRLC, Ms. Sepler-King was an associate attorney at a plaintiff-side employment firm, where she worked exclusively on employment litigation, with a focus on cases of workplace discrimination. She has also held a fellowship with the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing, where she assisted the Fair Housing Council to draft comprehensive anti-discrimination housing regulations to enact the provisions of the Fair Housing Act. While at the DFEH, Ms. Sepler-King authored numerous articles on state and federal laws regarding assistive animals in housing, employment, and public accommodations.

Ms. Sepler-King is a 2013 graduate of the University of California, Irvine School of Law. While in law school, Ms. Sepler-King spent a summer in New York, New York as the Edward Brodsky Legal Fellow for the Anti-Defamation League, assisting to draft amicus filings and advisory letters related to national civil rights cases, and then continued her involvement with the organization as an extern in Los Angeles. Ms. Sepler-King was the President of the UCI Law OutLaw group, and served on the Moot Court board as well as the Student Bar Association. Mallory has her B.A. in Diplomacy and World Affairs from Occidental College.
